They're going to your competitors.*

Turn the page for the four things you can do about it.

WHAT YOU CAN DO

Four things to fix it.

Each one helps. Done together, they close the leak entirely.

01 Measure what you're not measuring

Pull your call log and count the misses. Track your booking rate. Most shop owners have never looked at these numbers -- and what gets measured gets managed.

02 Stop letting calls go to voicemail

Voicemail loses jobs. By the time you call back, your customer has called someone else. Forward to a person, an answering service, or AI -- anything but voicemail.

03 Systematize the answer

Whoever picks up needs to ask the same questions every time. A simple script, an on-call rotation, and a way to track where leads come from. Consistency turns calls into bookings.

04 Get out of your own way

Your hourly rate as a tech is worth more than what it costs to hand off the phone. Stop being your own receptionist.

FROM THE FOUNDER

Why I built this.

I spent 25 years in HVAC and another 15 in home services. The phone problem you just saw the math on was something I lived with for years before I figured out how to fix it.

Every answering solution I tried let me down. Voicemail lost jobs. Answering services took messages but never actually booked anything. The receptionist I hired was great when she was there and useless when she wasn't. None of it solved the real problem.

So I built Reliant Support. It's an AI voice receptionist designed specifically for HVAC shops. It picks up every unanswered call instead of going to voicemail. It books appointments straight to your schedule. It costs less than what you're losing right now.

If anything in this audit caught your attention, Samantha from our team will reach out in the next day or two to answer any questions you have. She's a real person, not a sales pipeline. No pressure, no follow-up if it's not a fit.

If you'd rather get a feel for it before Samantha calls, there are two ways to do that below.
